He tries to send players into the fourth row of the stands on the forecheck and forces them into a line change on the backcheck. In the defensive end, he sprints directly to the point, leading with his stick and following with his shoulder. Simply put, he's a menace. He's a diverse shooter with an arsenal that includes a booming one-timer, a quick in-stride wrister, and a powerful angle-changing wrister off his outside leg. With quick hands and a high pace during attacks, he beats overcommitted defenders to gain the inside lane. -EliteProspects 2022 NHL Draft Guide

This is a website called elite prospects, which I believe has a fantastic design. It features things such as facts and statistics about weight and height, and information about his hometown and where they grew up. It gives the user an easy to use and a simple format that anyone can easily understand. I would like to really focus on features such as history and statistics about the player, so we can better understand and know how the player developed/grew over the years. I appreciate also the very light colors that present itself on the website, as I know some mixture of colors may be overwhelming towards the user and could become confusing to view and operate the website. Another feature I noticed was its multi-device user interface. When using a mobile device, I saw that once tabbed the menu to different pages, it allowed it to become accessible for mobile users.
